If there is one personality who made an impression and played an important role in the development of Panchavati, it is Cassam Uteem. When he was President of the Republic, in 2001, he cared about the inhabitants of this lost corner which was once called Hermitage. His visits put Panchavati, known to few Mauritians, on the map. This is how bodies such as the Trust Fund are working to help the villagers progress. Today, Panchavati is gradually getting rid of the image of poverty that has long stuck to her skin. L'Express
